

Juvenile Justice Jeopardy™

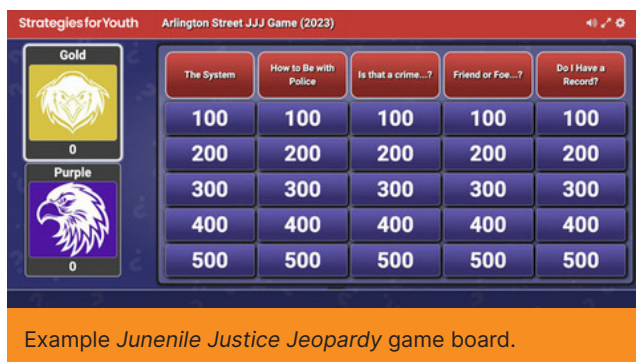

Critical knowledge to help youth avoid system involvement

What is Juvenile Justice Jeopardy (JJJ)?

- A prevention tool designed to maximize youth connection and engagement.
- An activity in game show format that promotes group conversation and corrects youths' misconceptions and connects them to a knowledgeable, credible messenger in an interactive dialogue.
- A educational game that provides youth with accurate information about various topics related to police, the system, and various pipelines into it.

JJJ can be played in both classrooms and community centers.

Example Juvenile Justice Jeopardy game board.

“ It was a fun way to learn, not only about police officers, but also specific laws and how they can apply to you if you are involved. I liked that it was a game instead of just a normal slideshow. ” — JJJ Participant

Who is JJJ for?

- Played by youth, ages 12-18.
- Led by local credible messengers, like teachers and youth leaders, program staff and other community stakeholders.
- Used in classrooms, after school programs, summer camps, diversion programs, detention centers, and more across the U.S. Currently JJJ is customized for play in 26 states.

There's a game for that!

JJJ has been used to tackle numerous topics, including: Interacting safely with law enforcement; developing life skills; teaching school codes of conduct; and addressing substance use and abuse. Contact us to see what we can design for you!

How does it work?

- SFY customizes JJJ games, ensuring their legal accuracy and that they address the voiced needs of a community.
- SFY staff trains local community members and peer leaders to lead JJJ games in their community and provides supportive materials and resources.
- All JJJ games are played using interactive, web-based game boards, and an in-person gameshow format, allowing youth to learn in a relaxed, fun, and engaging environment.
